Perinatal Mental Health
Quick Reference for Health-Care and Social Service Providers

Perinatal care should include discussions and follow-up regarding emotional and mental health.

Perinatal mental health concerns often begin prior to conception or during pregnancy.

In this guide the perinatal period refers to the time from conception to one year postpartum.
Perinatal Mental Health

Postpartum Blues

- Commonly referred to as baby blues
- Up to 75 per cent of all women experience it after childbirth; considered to be an expected part of postpartum adjustment
- Includes feeling of vulnerability, irritability, fatigue, tearfulness, sadness, anxiety, sleep and appetite disturbance
- Symptoms usually subside within two weeks
- Women who experience severe baby blues may be at a greater risk for postpartum depression

Postpartum Depression

One in eight postpartum women experience postpartum depression; it is the most common (unrecognized) complication of childbirth.

- Adolescent mothers (twice at risk, 26 per cent)
- Recent immigrant women (five times more likely to experience postpartum depression)

Major risk factors

- Depression or anxiety during pregnancy*
- Family history of depression
- Previous history of depression
- Recent stressful life events
- Lack of social support

Other risk factors

- Low self-esteem
- Relationship difficulties
- Low socioeconomic status
- Obstetric/pregnancy complications

Signs and symptoms

Women who exhibit either a depressed mood or a loss of interest or pleasure in usual activities in addition to any four other symptoms listed below for a period of over two weeks would indicate a diagnosis of depression (peripartum onset) using DSM-5 criteria

- Constant fatigue
- Trouble concentrating/making decisions
- Changes in weight or appetite
- Feeling anxious, irritable or restless

Signs and symptoms in one in 500 to one in 1000 deliveries

- Difficulty sleeping
- Feelings of hopelessness, worthlessness or guilt
- Feelings of numbness, either physical or lack of emotion
- Feelings of vulnerability, irritability or anger much of the time
- Feelings of worthlessness or guilt
- Feelings of being unloved or unlovable

Postpartum Anxiety

Between four to 15 per cent of women experience clinical depression following childbirth. Pre-existing anxiety or antenatal anxiety is a risk factor.

Signs and symptoms

- Slept disturbance
- Feelings of hopelessness, worthlessness or guilt
- Feelings of vulnerability, irritability or anger much of the time
- Feelings of being unloved or unlovable

Signs and symptoms of anxiety:

- Trouble breathing
- Numbness
- Sweating
- Shaking
- Nervousness
- Trouble concentrating
- Racing or repetitive thoughts that cause anxiety
- Trouble making decisions
- Trouble sleeping
- Feeling irritable
- Feeling anxious
- Feeling overwhelmed
- Feeling out of control
- Feels of hopelessness, worthlessness or guilt
- Feelings of numbness, either physical or lack of emotion
- Feelings of vulnerability, irritability or anger much of the time
- Feelings of being unloved or unlovable

Postpartum Psychosis

- Rare but severe postpartum mood disorder affecting one to two women per 1,000 births
- More common in women diagnosed with bipolar disorder or with a family history of mood disorders
- The risk of postpartum psychosis is 25 per cent in women with a bipolar disorder, rising to 50 per cent if they have had a previous episode of psychosis
- The onset of symptoms is rapid and immediate medical intervention is warranted

Signs and symptoms

- Extreme depressed or elated mood
- Severe insomnia
- Disorganized behaviour and thinking
- Extreme agitation, confusion
- Impaired concept of reality, delusions or hallucinations (distorted thoughts may involve the infant)
- Postpartum mood (major depression or mania) episodes with psychotic features appear to occur in one in 50 to one in 1000 deliveries
- Increased risk of suicide and infanticide

Interventions & Treatment

Postpartum Blues

- Increased awareness/education of perinatal women and families about perinatal mood changes
- Opportunity for women to voice concerns in a non-judgmental environment
- Social support and understanding from family, friends, peers and health-care providers
- Self-care strategies such as rest, good nutrition, respite from child care
- Practical support with child care, household tasks
- Stress reduction strategies such as calm breathing, walking, reading, listening to music

In addition to the interventions for postpartum depression

- Psychosocial support, support groups and psychoeducation
- Counselling
- Psychological interventions such as Cognitive Behavioural Therapy and Interpersonal Therapy are effective
- Severe postpartum depression (PPD) usually requires treatment with antidepressants along with some form of psychotherapy
- Selective Serotonin Reuptake Inhibitors (SSRIs) are the most frequently prescribed antidepressants
- The use of antidepressants is decided on a case-by-case basis in discussion between the woman and her physician
- For information about safety or risk of drugs during pregnancy and lactation contact Motherisk at www.motherisk.org
- A medical evaluation by a primary care provider is important to rule out underlying physical causes for symptoms (such as thyroid, iron levels)

Postpartum Depression

In addition to the interventions for postpartum blues

- Psychosocial interventions such as Cognitive Behavioural Therapy
- Pharmacotherapy for more severe symptoms

Questions to ask Postpartum Women

Evidence shows that women are reluctant to speak up or disclose symptoms unless asked directly and specifically. Reasons include guilt, denial, fear, lack of awareness or knowledge, concern that their baby will be removed from their care and language or cultural beliefs.

Asking the following questions may assist in identifying women who require further assessment and support for perinatal mental health issues.

- How long have you been feeling this way?
- How are things going in your family?
- Are you getting out?
- Are you eating and what are you eating?
- Have you had any troubling or repetitive thoughts about yourself or your baby?
- Have you had scary thoughts or fears about harming your baby or yourself?
- Are you worrying about something else?
- Have you had any unusual thoughts or feelings about your body?
- Other screening questions

Assessment Questions to ask Prenatal Women

The following screening questions can be used to explore for potential risk factors in prenatal women.

- Of women who experienced postpartum depression, over 33 per cent reported the onset during pregnancy and another 26 per cent before pregnancy. These factors have been shown to be associated with postpartum depression:
  - How has your mood been during this pregnancy?
  - What changes are you planning during this pregnancy?
  - Do you feel like you are coping well?
  - Do you have any concerns about your pregnancy or your baby?
  - Have you had scary thoughts or fears about harming your baby or yourself?
  - Are you feeling better or worse?
  - Motherisk, 1997
